PIONEERS OF RELIGION

The Session of the Hawaiian
Clergy.

NEWS FROM HILO
ON SATURDAY

Something About the Evangelical
Association Whose Business
Closes at Hilo Today.

Today and this evening the final evangelical services of a week's series of religious revival meetings will be conducted at Hilo by the Hawaiian Evangelical Association, and tomorrow Rev. Mr. Kincaid, Mr. Theo. Richards, Mr. Frank Damon, Rev. W. D. Westervelt, and other ministers and laymen who attended the annual convention, will begin their return voyage, arriving here Saturday, via the Kinau.

No reports have been received of the success of the association's plans, as there have been no steamers in since the first day of the series, but it was the intention of the ministers to arouse a great deal of enthusiasm, and to centralize the religious interest of the Island by the nightly meetings, that were to extend one week, beginning Thursday, June 6. It is expected that the delegation will bring a good report of the week's work on Saturday.

This is the first of the annual meetings that have been held outside of Honolulu, and Hilo was determined upon this year for the reason that the association wished to broaden its circle and create a new center, so that the people of the other Islands may come within closer scope.

The Hawaiian Evangelical Association has been in organization for many years, and was at first composed of only the old missionaries, when they were the sole representatives of Christian work in the Islands. As their labors began to bear fruit, however, there were many natives who became ministers, and later the association became largely a native organization. Even now the native ministers outnumber the American ministers in the association.

The delegation that attended the Hilo convention this year left on the Kinau on Tuesday, June 4, and among the delegates were Rev. W. M. Kincaid, representing Central Union Church; Mr. Frank Damon, superintendent of the Chinese work of the Islands; Rev. O. H. Gulick, superintendent of the Japanese work of Hawaii; Mr. J. Leedingham, of the North Pacific Institute, accompanied by four of his theological students; Mr. Theo. Richards, who goes as a general active worker, and who will direct his male quartet (the four theological students referred to); Miss Francis Yarrow, representing the Christian Endeavors; Rev. Mr. Westervelt, secretary of the association; Rev. Mr. Thwing, at the head of Chinese branch work, and also general superintendent of the Maui Chinese work, and Mr. Wong, pastor of the Chinese Church, who recently arrived from Canton, where he has been nine years in religious work.

Delegates from all the Islands were to attend, and among those outside the Honolulu delegation are Mr. Stephen Desha, who is pastor of the Congregational Church at Hilo, and Rev. Mr. Lydgate, of Kauai, who superintends all the work of that Island.

The religious meetings of the annual conventions have always aroused much interest and enthusiasm, and with the force of energetic religious workers that came together at Hilo, there probably was a robbing series of evening services. Full reports will be brought by the ministers on Saturday, when the Kinau arrives.

POLICE OFFICERS HAVE A TUSSELE

Japanese Gamblers Resist Arrest and One Has His Eye Put in Mourning.

While making an arrest last night of Japanese gamblers who were indulging in a game of Russian war in the back room of a Japanese store on Liliha street several of the special officers of the police department had a lively fight. One of the officers was kicked on the shins and otherwise touched up by the husky Japs, who tried to escape, but the plucky badge-wearers held on to their prisoners through thick and thin and brought them to the police station, where they were charged with gambling.

Officer Kealahia, with Apana and Ah On, made a sudden descent on the players, who numbered about forty. They were grouped about the center of attraction and did not notice the approach of the officers until Ah On made a dive into the middle of the crowd and grabbed the dice and box, as well as other adjuncts of the game. The other officers tried to head off a stampede out of the rear door. In the melee Apana was roughly used by several Japs who jumped him. He caught one around the neck, striking his heel on the officer's shin. A quick movement of Apana's arm, a sounding whack from his fist and the Japanese succumbed. Ah On had a tussle with another player, who objected to arrest, and in the mix-up received a black eye and a bruised mouth. The officers were able to catch four gamblers and bring them to the station. They were released on putting up cash bail.
